foreword

Sustainability thought leader Will Day told a fascinating – and revealing – anecdote during his keynote speech at Blue & Green Tomorrow’s Sustainable Investment Bootcamp in September that really epitomised why we decided to host the event.

Day, who is sustainability adviser to PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) and chairman of the non-profit Water and Sanitation for the Urban Poor (WSUP), recalled how he had enquired about sustainable investment (or ethical investment as he said it was primarily known back then) during a meeting with a former financial adviser. He wanted his money to do social or environmental good, as well as generate financial returns.

The adviser, Day said, actively tried to put him off from investing his money in such places. Speaking to a room of financial advisers in the Old Hall at Lincoln’s Inn in London, Day may have had a few of them having uneasy recollections of their own. After all, the event was designed for advisers who were interested in learning more about sustainable investment but perhaps currently felt they lacked sufficient knowledge to give advice on it. It’s likely that many of those sat in the audience had had similar experiences from the other side of the desk.

What’s most interesting about Day’s anecdote is that Blue & Green Tomorrow’s founder Simon Leadbetter had exactly the same experience with no fewer than three advisers. Telling each that he had considerable (and vast) inheritance to invest, all three determinedly tried to deter him from the sustainable option.

But if these two men – who work at the heart of sustainability and therefore know why sustainable, responsible and ethical investment is crucial – are being discouraged from investing in this way by finance professionals, what about the investors who perhaps don’t have their understanding?

These completely independent stories exemplify why there is a massive gap between investor demand for ethical and sustainable investment and adviser knowledge on the subject. Because it’s not a requirement to do so, too few financial advisers offer clients such options.

This is despite many of them getting requests for such investment strategies from clients (74% of advisers in a Blue & Green Tomorrow survey said their clients had at some point asked about ethical investment) and investors wanting to be offered them by their financial planners (63% of British investors in a recent YouGov poll said they wanted to be offered such options).

Sustainable investment is investment for 21st century investors. But those investors need 21st century advisers to help deal with and benefit from the many environmental and social challenges the world faces today.

This guide, our bootcamp and the many (but not enough) advisers who currently give advice in these areas are all part of the jigsaw. The big challenge will be encouraging a new wave of finance professionals to step up to the plate.

Ethical Futures

Everything we buy has some impact on our world. The food we eat, the clothes we wear, the transport we use – it all makes a difference.

As consumers, we hold the future of the world in our hands. We have the power to change things for the better – to buy from companies whose ethics we share and boycott those who just won't play fair.

We all hold the same power over the banks, mortgage lenders and insurance companies we use and through the investments we make.

ethicalfutures are ethical independent financial advisers (IFAs). We specialise in ethical investment advice and only recommend financial services and products that are ethically screened or that meet our ethical criteria.

ethicalfutures are based in Edinburgh and advise clients throughout Scotland, the UK and beyond. As ethical IFAs our job is to help you plan for your future and to make your money change your world.

The Ethical Partnership

Planning to succeed

We want to help you create a financial plan that will meet both your life goals, and your personal values. Goal setting is a powerful tool, whether applied to one's professional life, personal aspirations, or personal finances. In fact, goal setting can make the difference between success and failure. "He who fails to plan, plans to fail".

Financial needs

We all have financial needs, and finding an affordable solution to meet those needs is an area in which many people seek advice. Your needs today could be significantly different to those of the future.

We also have personal values. However, what is ethical to one person is not necessarily ethical to another. Our aim is to provide you with financial advice based on your values throughout your life. Our focus is on service. We want you as a client for life.

What are your financial goals?

You may wish to plan for a child's education, for the purchase of a dream home or perhaps for income in your retirement. No effective financial plan can ignore the effects of outside impact like accidents, long term illness or loss of employment. It is also important to consider the effect of your death on others.

To help you fulfil your financial goals we offer both an advisory and execution-only service. This allows you to take advantage of our expertise in providing professional and impartial independent financial advice on socially responsible and ethical investment.

We always strive to find ethical financial solutions to suit your needs that work throughout the many different stages of your life and fit with your lifestyle and beliefs.

Celia Bennett

ETHICAL INVESTMENT COMES OF AGE

Ethical investment has come a long way since the UK's first retail ethical investment fund was launched in 1984. Investments in the UK's green and ethical funds are now in excess of £11 billion and 45% of UK adults with investments now want at least some of their investments to take green and ethical considerations into account.*

As consumers, we choose to shop locally and to source ethical, organic products. Now, more and more of us are realising that we can apply the same criteria to our finances. The growth of the Fair Trade movement and the success of the Move Your Money campaign, despite the economic downturn, demonstrate the strength of feeling and desire for change.

Originally, people wanted to invest ethically in order to avoid actively companies involved with the arms trade or tobacco. Nowadays, people are also interested in actively supporting companies which reflect their own values: climate protection, healthy living or clean earth themes, for example. Appointing active investment fund managers such as Castlefield, who will vote critically at AGMs and will work to influence company policy is also a very effective way of ensuring more socially responsible practices.

Gaëa – global and ethical investment advice – was founded in 1993 and is one of the UK's original ethical finance companies. Founded by human rights campaigner and environmental activist, Brigid Benson, Gaëa now has a strong advisory team, and is part of the Castlefield Group, an employee-owned business based in Manchester, with clients throughout the UK and beyond. Being owned by its employees, clients and a charitable foundation ensures that the business is managed in a more sustainable way for the long term, rather than for the short term gains of any individual shareholder.

For 20 years, Gaëa has been promoting ethical investments to forward looking investors. Most clients are saving or investing for income in retirement. Our task is to research then invest in a mix of mainstream as well as progressive companies, who are committed to becoming more environmentally and socially responsible. This involves a compromise, but increasingly environmentally and socially responsible companies are expected to provide the best returns.

Many people would prefer to see some investments only in the most innovative investments with high social or environmental impact. But, these may be new, small and very high risk. For example, some of our clients have invested in Cafe Direct. Others have made loans, large and small, to Oiko Credit – a not-for-profit cooperative which provides funding worldwide to cooperatives and the micro finance sector.

Whatever your needs, Gaëa can offer financial advice tailored to your individual values and objectives, both today, and in the years ahead.

FIND A SPECIALIST ETHICAL FINANCIAL ADVISER NEAR YOU

Sustainable investment is what we write about day in, day out. Contrary to the early-90s Des'ree hit 'Crazy Maze', which begins, "Money don't make my world go round", money is what governs almost every decision we as consumers and businesses make. It's important, therefore, that we use it as a force for good. All the financial advisers listed are specialists in ethical investment and will help you choose the best possible financial solutions that match your values.

SWITCH YOUR ENERGY PROVIDER TO GOOD ENERGY

Even without the climate change imperative, there is a desperate need to reduce mankind's emissions. The problem is pollution and waste. Switching to cleaner sources of energy is imperative, and Good Energy, as the UK's only 100% renewable electricity provider, is the best place to go. Switch quoting 'Blue & Green Tomorrow' and Good Energy will give you £25 off your first bill. Related report: The Guide to Limitless Clean Energy 2013 - <http://bit.ly/16LOBsW>

Choose a supplier that's changing UK energy, for good.

We source our electricity from certified renewables like Cornish sunshine, Scottish wind and Welsh rain. We always have done and always will.

Our electricity is produced locally too, by a growing community of independent generators across Britain.

And it usually costs less than the Big Six's standard dual fuel tariffs.
